

Associate Professor – Professor: Beaumont Health System

Beaumont Health System and the Beaumont Research Institute in Royal Oak, Michigan are seeking an accomplished PhD scientist to fill the position of Director of Metabolomics in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, with an additional faculty appointment at the Oakland University - William Beaumont School of Medicine. Beaumont is a fully integrated health system consisting of three hospitals serving Michigan's Tri-county area. In 2011, Beaumont partnered with Oakland University to open the Oakland University - William Beaumont School of Medicine.

This will be a single faculty position at the level of Associate Professor or Full Professor. The position seeks to advance the role of metabolomics in translational research in clinical areas including obstetrics, gynecology, pediatric and adult disorders such as cancer. The position requires a doctoral degree and practical research experience in the metabolomics analysis of biological materials using MS and NMR platforms. Related experience in proteomic analysis is a plus. Expertise and or significant interest in metabolomic analysis using dried blood spots, fresh tissue, and cell samples is highly desirable. Responsibilities include providing overall technical and scientific leadership of the metabolomics unit. The successful candidate will be responsible for building a team of metabolomics researchers and providing their direct supervision and training and also for spearheading collaboration with the genomic and proteomic units. The Director of Metabolomics will provide strategic guidance of the unit towards novel and promising scientific areas in translational research and build collaborative links with other researchers in different clinical and other disciplines at the Beaumont Health System and Oakland University. The successful candidate will serve as the primary person in the writing of collaborative and multidisciplinary grants. Please send CV and 3 references to:
